

As We Choose, We Live: A Cinnamon Black Book (Cinnamon Black Books 14)

Do you feel like running this morning? Malcolm asked Cinnamon. He stood over her as she lay on the bed, staring at the ceiling. She had been extremely reserved since Auras pre-wedding party. Turning to him, she swallowed back tears. She couldn't say with any certainty what she was feeling other than she felt un-mothered. It had been more than a decade since her mom passed, five years for Aunt Sara and more than two for Aunt Gladys but she felt it like she had never felt it before. Seeing her watery eyes, Malcolm sat on the bed, pulling her head into his lap. With that loving gesture, her floodgates opened. She wept for several minutes. When she finally stopped, he whispered, Please talk to me I miss mama and the aunties in a very deep way today. I have you, my kids and the grandkids but I miss those women who cared more about me than anything else. There are times when a woman misses and needs to feel like a daughter, a beloved daughter. He felt her pain. There was nothing he could do for that. Cinnamon was wife, mother, grandmother, mentor, and nurturer and though she had great friends, there had never been a woman other than her family women who filled that role in her life. Alexandra was her best friend and adored Cinnamon but a nurturer she was not, immediately Bridget James came to his mind. I know baby. Do you ever talk to Bridget James? The two of you seemed so close. She looked up at him. We were getting close but I backed away once she got close to Alexandra. You know Xan is so territorial. I love talking to Bridget but don't need the drama. Hmm, sometimes we have to grab what is best for us and our loved ones have to deal with it. For all you know, you and Bridget can be of mutual benefit. She snuggled down into his arms. That's why I love you Good, now let's run. ???? Aura refused to have a huge wedding. She was looking forward to marrying MII for the second time but they were keeping it simple. They were marrying at the beach with their children and family. His mother was refusing to come and she was fine with that and MII seemed okay as well. They had grown more as a couple and the kids loved having their family together. There were the naysayers though and mostly she was able to ignore them but she was participating in a forum for women rights and she knew her sexuality would come up. She especially knew it would be Abigail her former lover and friend who would ensure it. But she felt ready. She knew it was time she addressed her feelings in a public arena and to allow the media to do with it what they chose. Because as she chose she lived.
