

Dartmouth Conspiracy

What would you do if you were ordered to kill the occupants of a building when one of the occupants was a member of your family and childhood friend? Karl knows that if he carries out orders to lead a precision bombing attack on the Royal Naval College in Dartmouth he will probably kill his English cousin with whom, long ago, he swore a pact of friendship until death. But a pilot of the German Luftwaffe has no choice, the attack must proceed. After the war and consumed with guilt, Karl returns to England: Did I kill Andrew? His quest lead him to Anna, a secret agent with a score to settle; Robert, a war-time spy who has made his home in Portugal; Ivo, an ex-RAF Spitfire pilot who has recently escaped the oppressive Communist regime in Czechoslovakia. Karl uncovers the secret of the Dartmouth Conspiracy but tension mounts as he is unwittingly drawn into a lethal trap. The final piece of jigsaw finds its slot when Karl makes his final visit to Dartmouth in the summer of 2005 for the colleges centenary celebrations. Dartmouth Conspiracy is a thriller, a blend of fact and fiction whose players are drawn together from countries recently in conflict and who still search for peace long after the war is over. THE AUTHOR James Stevenson was born in November 1934. At the age of seven he saw a Focke-Wulf 190 at bungalow-chimney height seconds after it had dropped a bomb on the Royal Naval College in Dartmouth. Twelve years later, after training in Canada during National Service, James Stevenson earned his wings at the age of 19 and was qualified to fly the 500mph De Havilland Vampire, one of the RAFs earliest single-seat jet fighters. In recent years James Stevenson has appeared in four radio dramas for BBC Radio. He won first prize in Waterstones 2009 poetry competition with a witty celebration of Robert Burns 250th birthday entitled To The Poets Muse He has published two novels - Dartmouth Conspiracy and Fly the Storm. His forthcoming third book shares his exciting and amusing experiences while learning to fly.
