These selected paragraphs distill the contents and give you a quick look inside Guy Deverell, v. 1 of 2: Look inside the book: The pretty little posting station, known as the Plough Inn, on the Old London Road, where the Sterndale Road crosses it, was in a state of fuss and awe, at about five o'clock on a fine sharp October evening, for Sir Jekyl Marlowe, a man of many thousand acres, and M.P. for the county, was standing with his back to the fire, in the parlour, whose bow-window looks out on the ancient thoroughfare I have mentioned, over the row of scarlet geraniums which beautify the window-stone. ...It had witnessed Lady Alices pedestrian return from church, an act of humiliation, almost of penance, such as the memory of Wardlock could furnish no parallel to; and now it was to see another portent, for her ladyships own gray horses, fat and tranquil beasts, who had pulled her to and from church for I know not how many years, under the ministrations of the careful coachman, with exemplary sedateness, on this abnormal Sabbath took fright at a musical performance of two boys, one playing the Jews harp and the other drumming tambourine-wise on his hat, and suadente diabolo and so forth, set off at a gallop, to the terror of all concerned, toward home. About Joseph Sheridan Le Fanu, the Author: After lukewarm reviews of the former novel, set in the Phoenix Park area of Dublin, Le Fanu signed a contract with Richard Bentley, his London publisher, which specified that future novels be stories of an English subject and of modern times, a step Bentley thought necessary for Le Fanu to satisfy the English audience. ...However, Sayers first reference to Le Fanu appears in an earlier Lord Peter Wimsey novel, The Nine Tailors (1934), where he is quoted directly (from Wylders Hand, in the opening to the seventh part of Chapter II and again in the opening to the second part of Chapter III) and a mysterious letter is referred to (first by Wimseys valet, Mervyn Bunter) as written by a person of no inconsiderable literary ability, who had studied the works of Sheridan Lefanu sic and was, if I may be permitted the expression, bats in the belfry, my lord.
