

Treading The Mendoza Line

Treading the Mendoza Line is an interactive baseball novel, written for the reader to experience big league baseball by former major league player Rob Ellis. Step into the shoes of a home run champion and taste what it feels like to be under the microscope on the national stage. As you read, you may think you're the one holding the tablet but in truth you're the guy in the story. You, a home run champion, find yourself on the Commissioner of Baseballs bad list. You've been sent to triple-A Tucson to work off an embarrassing, career-sacking HGH/drug suspension. Kicking your game back into high gear is the challenge, but doing it in the minor leagues is no easy task. The fans are pulling for you, but your closest allies have become untrustworthy. Your only dependable ally is yourself, but you have reason to wonder even about him. Everyone seems to be coming after you, from the Commissioner to the batboy. To make matters worse, this is the final year of your contract. One item keeps you sane: the Houston Astros aren't paying you twelve million dollars a year to play in the minors. A recall is imminent. A psychological tale with more genuine baseball material than the most vivid tell-all books. Read it, experience it, become it.
