

The Story Girl

From National Magazine, Volume 35: ON every page of The Story Girl, the touch of the finished artist is apparent. There is a smoothness of style, a finesse that places Miss Montgomery in the first rank of contemporary writers. Child life is mirrored in such a charming manner that the reader is unconsciously carried back to the happy, carefree days of his own childhood. The Story Girl was gifted with a captivating voice a voice that possessed the happy faculty of making her listeners live through, with her, the varied scenes in the story she was telling. In her inimitable style, the author has made her heroines character so real that one joins heart and soul in the work and play of the happy group at Carlisle. A picturesque valley of Prince Edward Island, twenty-four miles from a railroad, is the scene of the story. But the Story Girls tales of the Milky Way, The Wedding Veil of the Proud Princess, The Tale of the Rainbow and How Kissing was Discovered are told in such a delightful manner that one becomes oblivious to environment and breathes in the sweet perfume of the blossoming trees in Uncle Alecs fascinating old orchard. One cannot read of Felicity, Cecily, Sara, Dan, Felix, Beverly and Peter without feeling that the young mind has its seeming tragedies, and the authors sympathetic knowledge of human nature and charm of description act like a tonic on a wearied mind.
