Not illustrated. 1808 Excerpt: ...Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance; Poison is in her eyes, and death in every glance. O, I musk ask; nor ask alone, but move Her mind to mercy, or must die for love.--Thus Arcite: And thus Palamon replies, (Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes,) Speakst thou in earnest, or in jesting vein? Jestings, said Arcite, suits but ill with pain. It suits far worse, (said Palamon again, And bent his brows,) with men who honour weigh, Their faith to break, their friendship to betray; But worst with thee, of noble lineage bom, My kinsman, and in arms my brother sworn. Have we not plighted each our holy oath, That one should be the common good of both; One soul should both inspire, and neither prove His fellows hindrance in pursuit of love? To this before the gods we gave our hands, And nothing but our death can break the bands. This binds thee, then, to further my design, As I am bound by vow to further thine: Nor canst, nor darst thou, traitor, on the plain, Appeach my honour, or thy own maintain; Since thou art of my council, and the friend Whose faith I trust, and on whose care depend. And wouldst thou court my ladys love, which I Much rather than release would choose to die? But thou, false Arcite, never shalt obtain Thy bad pretence; I told thee first my pain; For first my love began ere thine was born; Thou, as my council, and my brother sworn, Art bound to assist my eldership of right, Or justly to be deemed a perjured knight.--Thus Palamon: But Arcite, with disdain, In haughty language, thus replied again,--Forsworn thyself: the traitors odious name I first return, and then disprove thy claim. If love be passion, and that passion nurst With strong desires, I loved the lady first. Canst thou pretend
