

Waiting for Love

On a trip to Korea, a man in his 20s tells a Korean young man a story. It is about a young man he taught a few years ago in High School. The young mans name was Henry. Henry is the editor of the school paper, and falls in love with the teacher from a far away place. William saves the 18 year old when he dies on the soccer field on sports day. In the hospital he tells him that he came back in time to protect Henry, and that Henry was going to great things one day (in college). Henry declares his love for William, who is only five years older. William promises to come back three years after William graduates high school. He will meet him in the park, if Henry still cares. William expected that to be the end of it, but three years later, Henry is there waiting. As an adult, and no longer his student, will William take a chance with him, giving his heart and be willing to take him into the future where they could be together without the shame Henrys culture would place on them in the present day?
